Attitudes Toward Sexual Minorities: a Social Psychological Perspective

Research on attitudes toward sexual minorities reflects the multifaceted nature of attitudes as well as the diversity of this inclusive group. Attitudes contain cognitive (i.e., stereotypes), affective (i.e., prejudice), and behavioral (i.e., discrimination) components in both their formation and expression. This talk will focus on the use of two social psychological models to examine attitudes towards sexual minorities: the Stereotype Content Model and the Behaviors from Intergroup Affect and Stereotypes map.
